

A New Hope

I opened my eyes, and I couldn't believe what I saw, it was raining. I heard my mum was screaming happily in the living room, I jumped out of bed and looked through the window. In my 6 years of life, I had never seen a raindrop. It was the first time it rained since 2036 and everyone was as excited as me.

I walked into the living room and asked my mum if I could go out with my friends and feel the raindrops hitting my face. I wondered if this meant the drought was over. The news were all about this strange phenomenon because this storm wasn't normal in 2045. Kids laughed and everyone looked at the sky wondering if it would leave as it had come.

It was a bit of hope, which planet Earth really needed, it was a miracle.
